“In January 2023 I was diagnosed with ALS. Thanks to my 21-year reservist career as a flight nurse for the U.S. Air Force, the VA has provided me with a stairlift and a regular and motorized wheelchair. It’s been a difficult journey, and I’ve tried to adapt to the changes with grace while praying to God for a scientific breakthrough. But when it comes to my death, as a registered nurse I’ve seen up close how awful air hunger is, and I don’t want that for myself. Once I can’t breathe on my own, I would like to institute the option of medical aid in dying. But that option does not yet exist in Illinois. The prognosis for ALS is typically two to five years from diagnosis. I don’t have time to wait beyond this legislative session. I hope my state lawmakers can recognize the immediate impact authorizing this option makes and make it available here.”

“My experience as a cancer survivor has given me a new perspective on preparing for my demise. At the end of my life, I want there to be harmony and closure for me and my family. And I’d like to have the option of medical aid in dying so that I can say my goodbyes in a way that allows my family to move on. When it comes to healthcare, Black Americans don’t always get the same options as white people. But having more information and increased preparation allows us to be the beneficiaries of some of those opportunities. The thing about medical aid in dying is that it is an option that can help people who need it if they choose to use it — nothing more or less.”

“After I was diagnosed with cancer in January 2022, I started to think about what I wanted to do with the rest of my life, because I knew my time was limited. I did research on medical aid in dying and I thought, “This is what I want to be advocating for.” I want my family and friends to remember the good times. And I want to make a decision for myself about when it’s time to go. If I had the option of medical aid in dying in Illinois, it would allow me to die peacefully, with dignity. It would allow me and my family to say our goodbyes and let go. As a former social worker, I’ve advocated for homeless youth rights. Now, with aid in dying, I’m advocating for something that affects me.”

“I’ve had numerous conversations with God throughout my life, especially during my illness. I cannot understand why people judge me as a sinner for wanting to die peacefully rather than enduring excruciating pain until the end of my life. I live my last days in horror of mind-splitting headaches, blackouts, blindness, convulsions and electric shocks from the incurable brain tumor that has spread to my liver, stomach, testicles and other vital organs. I don’t want my tumor to dictate how I will die. But it is not affordable or practical for the vast majority of terminally ill people to move to another state where aid-in-dying is authorized, away from their friends, family and medical team, just to die peacefully.”

“Having an incurable brain tumor means needing to be thoughtful about the likely reality of facing the end of my life earlier than I would like to accept. I don’t want to die; I very much want to live. I love my life, I love my daughter, I love my husband, and I don’t want to leave them. I want to keep trying as long as there’s hope. But I want to avoid being trapped in my body, in pain as it’s breaking down, knowing that I’m dying, for who knows how long. I would prefer to have the right to decide for myself whether or not medical aid in dying makes sense, rather than have strangers keep the option unavailable to Illinoisans.”

“I want to be alive. I want to continue teaching my special ed students, I want to continue watching hockey, I want to keep playing video games and spending time with my roommate’s dog, Jaxson. I don’t want to have cancer, and I don’t want to be in this position. But there’s not much I can do about that. What I can control is how I go out from this disease. Cancer will eventually take my life, but I’d rather not suffer when I could go out peacefully and on my own terms. Without the option of medical aid in dying in Illinois, however, I can’t move back home to spend my final months with my family. Cancer isn’t something anybody chooses, but I can choose how I move forward.”

Andrew availed himself of California’s aid-in-dying law and died peacefully in November 2022.

“The last time I saw my partner, Jack, he was in so much pain despite the excellent hospice care he was receiving. I remember crying, and Jack crying a little too. Jack was dying, imminently. There was no stopping that. But those final moments between us didn't have to be wracked with pain. Jack could have avoided days of suffering if medical aid in dying were authorized in Illinois. Instead, Jack suffered during his last days on earth. For what? As someone living with a disability, I believe I should get to make my own decisions about what kind of medical care I receive when I reach the end of my life. No one else should get to make that decision.”

“My oncologist has a phrase I really like: “Forge on.” I like that it's action oriented and it's strong. “Forge on” implies that I have some control. It is power. That's what I want with living and that's what I want with dying. I want to be empowered to take a proactive approach to the reality of my death. I want to die with dignity and grace, with respect, options and with a tiny bit of control. But the state of Illinois does not yet provide the option of medical aid in dying to its terminally ill residents. I hope I live several more years, but when meaning is not there anymore, or if I were in significant pain, I don't see why I should be forced to extend my suffering. I want the peace of mind of being able to determine when enough is enough.”

“My partner of 45 years, Joanne “Rocky” Kunz, was given an advanced stage 4 cancer diagnosis at the beginning of 2021. After chemo and immunotherapy failed, and her pain became increasingly intense, we stopped treatment. We both felt medical aid in dying was an important option and had even discussed moving to a state with this option, but we have a son with disabilities and his home and network are here. I am angry that Illinois forced my wife to suffer needlessly and pointlessly. Knowing she was ready to die, and there was no way I could help her, I’m left feeling like I failed her. It was such a tragic ending for such a beautiful person.”

“Death does not scare me, but pain and suffering do. I’m 75 years old and the future of how my lung cancer manifests is unknown. I don’t want to linger in pain, suffering for months. I don’t want to experience ongoing air hunger. My cancer can spread anywhere and everywhere, including my brain, and depending on where it metastasizes, the symptoms can be excruciating. Illinois does not yet authorize medical aid in dying. Because of this, I am planning to voluntarily stop eating and drinking (VSED) to control my dying process when I’m ready to leave this realm of existence. I wish medical aid in dying was an option so that I could be assured to have control over when I die, with the ability to be surrounded by my loved ones.”
